Self-Management and the Unions

The emergence of systems of workforce self-management—and a multi-variant character is conceivable here, depending on the conditions and wishes of the majority—inevitably predetermines (and in many respects) processes of personality and renewal in the union movement. This may be judged from the example of the unions of both the Soviet Union and certain other socialist countries. In Bulgaria, for example, where the development of self-management processes has encompassed all cells of the social organism, they were the basis for the "integral concept of reorganization" of the structure of the unions and their functional activity under the conditions of the self-management of the workforce elaborated by the 10th Bulgarian Trade Unions Congress (1987). In this connection the congress emphasized the importance of a rethinking of the role of the unions and the need for them to find in the process of restructuring and renewal their own "union character". "The unions," a representative of the Bulgarian unions believes, "should abandon tasks not within their province, whose fulfillment erodes their specific character and distracts them from problems of vital importance to the working people." Truly, the importing to the unions of this function of state establishments and services or the

The legalized transition of the workforce to self-management has yet to become broadly attractive, and participation therein has yet to become a part of the value orientations of the mass of labor (worker, employee, engineering/technical personnel). To judge by everything, the unions lack the ability to awaken mass interest in self-management, while they themselves frequently seem in the eyes of the working people not authoritative, independent organizations but a kind of auxiliary "social amenity service" with all the malfunction characteristic of it under our conditions. Whence the disheartening results for them of a poll conducted in September 1987 of 350 officials of union authorities of various levels in 34 cities of the country, which were communicated at the conference by the same AUCCTU Research Center. To the question "How would you assess the role of the trade union body which you represent in tackling socio-economic tasks at the enterprise?" 51.4 percent replied: "It takes part, but has little influence," 23.3 percent declared that it "takes part formally" and 5.7 percent believed that it "does not in fact participate".

An important component of the new system of economic management which attracted the attention of the foreign participants in the meeting are the elections of enterprise executives. The guests learned that 36,000 executives of various levels were elected in our country in 1987, for example. What is new is primarily the fact that they are responsible not only to the state but also to the workforce which elected them. However, here also the process of change is encountering considerable difficulties of an organizational, psychological and other nature. The old stereotypes impeding the transition to genuinely free

In the Yugoslav scholar's opinion, this is all the more important now, in the period of perestroika and the abrupt break with the command-bureaucratic system, in that in the past the unions in the USSR "always treated with a certain reserve (that is, temporizingly—B.S.) new phenomena in the development of the Radical changes are taking place in all spheres of public life—economic, political and cultural and in social consciousness. The proponents of economic-technological solutions place at the top of the pyramid the utilization of new technologies and the achievement of economic growth primarily via free market mechanisms. Stat-technocrats see the solution to those problems in a strengthening of the regulatory role of the state.

...the "new" values are more or less a re-creation of the old values that would "merge" the interests of different developments of culture, traditions, goals and forms of social democracy and new "post-material" values.

The concept of the selective—ecological and socially—moderate economic growth, which is becoming more and more widespread in Eastern Europe—is at the basis of the current social democratic platform. Its goal is to place the achievements of scientific-technical progress at the service of the broadest layers of the population and of society as a whole, in contrast to the ideas of monetarism. It presupposes the development of an "ecologically clean" economy, the harmonious combination of These questions are being disputed within the ranks of Social Democrats. Representatives of the left wing criticize the concept of the "directed market" because it has no effective means of restraining market calamities or preventing the concentration of economic power in the hands of private capital. However, the left wing itself still does not have an entire program for an effective organization of the economy under the new conditions.

The concept of "social property" is becoming more and more widespread in the social democratic sphere. It encompasses socialized enterprises and firms from the government sector (by means of the democratic ...

Moreover, the various steps being taken on a regular basis to improve the environment are an important characteristic of the level of military strategic activity in the USSR and the other countries.

For operations in the difficult terrain of a counterinsurgency, past experience on the balance of military forces is not a good indicator. Since 1945, American Policy has been that this is even more so if it is applied to the situation of conventional forces and arms in Europe. In a study, the strategic analysis forces, where there is a clear assignment of their combat tasks and relatively less that of money as for their applications, does not deal with a more complex situation of a wide choice of use.

If Conservative circles attribute the increase in arms, in part, to the fact that arms production seemingly creates conditions for resolving unemployment. The Social Democratic Party, understanding the negative tie between the arms race and crisis phenomena, feel that it is precisely disarmament that can free resources for creating work positions.

It is another matter that the logic of the actual policies of ruling parties of "democratic socialism," formed under the influence of various internal and external factors, often contradicts their basic point of view. (The obvious

The views of Social Democrats and neo-conservatives differ considerably on the problem of a new international economic order (NIEO). Despite the fact that the approach of Botswana and its member parties to this extremely important global problem bears the imprint of reformist inconsistency, nevertheless even in such a form the NIEO resembles a well-known democratic variant for solving the problems that concern the people.

resources that are used to arm developed as well as developing countries could be used instead for developmental needs. Non-conservatives reject this kind of relationship.

The approaches of social democratic and neo-conservative forces to the development of specific measures related to the establishment of NMEP also differ. Thus, in speaking about the necessity to change the nature of foreign trade ties between "North" and "South," Social Democrats place the social component first and not the commercial component, as conservatives do. Social Democrats do not feel that deliveries to the "third world" must depend first and foremost on the raw-materials needs of the "North," or that the "South" must

United States and the A-7 are all "not responding adequately" to the unilateral actions of the USSR, it appears that it is becoming more and more clear to world opinion that the policy is impractical, unreasonable and unwise. It is inspired by madness. And it is obvious that unilateral steps of the Soviet Union to cut off aid and create complications in the membership of the suppliers to the continent of the Americas is the way to

On 12 October 1989, the USSR announced that it was withdrawing its troops from Cuba, ending an occupation which had lasted for 42 years. The withdrawal was announced a few days after the fall of the Berlin Wall, and in light of the fact that the USSR had just signed a new agreement with the United States to reduce its nuclear arsenal. The withdrawal was seen as a significant step towards normalizing relations between the two superpowers, and was also seen as a sign of the USSR's growing openness and reform.

NATO is more and more clearly becoming paramount.

The noticeable improvement of the relations between the West and the East has greatly intensified the discussion of the structure of parity, especially in the area of the balance of conventional forces and arms. Earlier Marxist theory of social progress regarded the elimination of capitalism and the triumph of the new formation as an essential prerequisite of such civilization transformation.

particular features of corporatism and transnationalization is evidently under way. Although Western societies today are taking a conservative-right path of restructuring, the democratic alternative version seems by no means improbable. The main thing that may be said definitely about the contours of such an alternative is the necessity of struggle against the bourgeois-technocratic state as the essential direction of democratic development.

a large proportion of social democratic parties have stepped onto the path of new political conceptualization. A sign of this is the readiness of Social Democrats for dialogue without many of the reservations expressed previously, and if the opportunity arises, for cooperation with the ruling parties of socialist countries regarding the important aspects of world policy.

Social democratic parties are feeling the growing influence of renewal processes occurring within the USSR.

The interpretation of perestroika, however, differs among different social democratic parties because the degree of interest in it, the depth of understanding and analysis of the transformations taking place in the Soviet socialist society and the stagnant phenomena that have accumulated during preceding periods which the Soviet people are now forced to eliminate. In a number of social democratic parties one sees a constructive interpretation of the developmental tendencies of Soviet society, first and foremost glasnost and democracy, that previously were interpreted prejudicially, although the new conceptually-whole understanding of these tendencies has not yet been developed. The predominant majority of Social Democrats agree on the fact that great as yet unutilized reserves for reforming society exist in the USSR.

In their evaluation of perestroika, Social Democrats as a rule attach priority significance to the charismatic factor, seeing the tasks standing before Soviet society and especially the prospects for solving them as depending on the precisely in the evaluation of the role of the charismatic factor in the transformation of society.

During the 1980s, the role of the charismatic factor in the process of transformation of society has been significantly reduced. The role of the charismatic factor has been reduced to the level of a factor of influence on the process of transformation of society.

On the other hand, necessary to resolve this problem. The process of its realization are being established in the process of the reciprocal exchange of observers at Warsaw Pact and NATO exercises. It is clear that some thought must be given to how to proceed further along this path.

These are a few considerations in regard to the elaboration of the role of the charismatic factor in the process of transformation of society.

Speaking of the interaction of vari-directional forces, A.A. Valuyevskiy posed the question of the formation of a new standard of intercourse and, particularly, the molding of a "culture of disagreement" of various political forces. The establishment of such a culture is a long and complex process. That is why it is necessary to carry out indirect and, sometimes, direct aggression. All this has usually led to a narrowing of the social base of the existing regime and in the majority of cases to the outbreak of civil war. National reconciliation may be considered a process of the regrouping of social forces aimed at expanding the social base of progressive political and public organizations, ending foreign interference in a conflict and reconciling the

To some extent this and many other aspects predicting the departure of the unions from the historical scene have fallen victim to an emotional one-sided approach to the complex phenomena of economic and social development. They have taken certain consequences for the unions of the voluntarist, noncomprehensive introduction, dictated by optimism (without regard for the social, ecological and other aspects) of new technology as immutable, objectively given and irreversible. The confusion of many union leaders in the face of new, unexpected processes for them, particularly in the period of the cyclical crisis of the start of the 1980's, was perceived as an indication of the "essential" crisis of the union movement as a social institution, which was going into decline.

The policy of national reconciliation requires thorough theoretical and tactical and strategic study. An in-depth investigation of its diverse forms and methods and its ambiguous experience and a search for forms of the nonviolent interaction of heterogeneous class and political forces in the interests of social harmony.

As N.S.A. Krasin rightly observed, the transition to socialism means a historical era encompassing many decades, throughout which transformations which are diverse in nature are effected. It means not simply the pulling of countries from one social system to another but an interconnected process in which various trends interweave: the surmounting of capitalism on the technological and economic basis.

realization of the union movement's latent possibilities and the road on its progress. Seminars, meetings, symposia and conferences are being devoted to the fair of the unions in the modern world. They, over plus, was discussed also at the traditional international symposium-practical conference "Perestroika, New Thinking and the Union Movement" conducted jointly by the AUCCTU, the USSR Academy of Sciences International Workers' Movement Institute and the AUCCTU Trade Union Movement Higher School at the end of April in Moscow. This meeting's original task was to familiarize union activists and the scholars invited to the conference from various countries with the progress of perestroika in the USSR under the conditions of glasnost and the transformations in the USSR and our unions' specific contribution to the cause of perestroika. They wished to know whether the democratization of Soviet society also meant a broadening of the rights and possibilities of the professional workers' organizations. Whether the unions would obtain "total independence" of the party and its decisions. Whether the arsenal of the Soviet unions' resources for defending and representing the workers' interests would be enriched. What influence the 10th All-Union CPSU Conference would exert on the process of perestroika including the unions themselves and their partners?

historic materialism, as we know, takes account for the development of society the evolution of its technological method of production. "In acquiring new production forces, people change their production method, and with the change in production method and in the method of securing their lives, they alter all their social relations," wrote K. Marx in "The Poverty of Philosophy" (13, Vol 4, p 133). The difference is that the main objective of the study is to determine the role of the state in the development of the economy. The study is based on the analysis of the economic situation in the country and the role of the state in the development of the economy. The study is based on the analysis of the economic situation in the country and the role of the state in the development of the economy.

As proof he presented...figures on the forestalling pace of industrial development in the USSR as compared to the U.S.A. without considering that in Japan this pace has been even greater than in the USSR and that in general growth pace is a worthless argument for proving "radical differences" in the type of development.

...development of relatively backward countries. In this case the industrial working class was the subject of the model of socialism which is now called administrative command and which had exhausted itself historically by the time of the start of the SAT revolution and the transition to an intensive type of management.

On the other hand, components of the last decade of economic development which promoted the expansion of the foreign presence in the country led to the diffusion of new power structures. The process revealed that, in 1960, a generation of young elites were coming to the country in 1967, for example. There is now a growingly the fact that they are cosmopolitan and only as one state but also to the multinationals which entered there. However, there was the passage of change in international relationships that reflect in an important way psychological and other factors. The old stereotypes regarding the Russians is gradually free-

There are a few things that we can do to make our code more efficient. First, we can use the `isinstance` function to check if the input is a string. This will allow us to use the `str` type for the input, which is more efficient than using the `str` type for the input. Second, we can use the `len` function to get the length of the input. This will allow us to use the `len` function to get the length of the input, which is more efficient than using the `len` function to get the length of the input. Third, we can use the `range` function to iterate over the input. This will allow us to use the `range` function to iterate over the input, which is more efficient than using the `range` function to iterate over the input. Finally, we can use the `sum` function to calculate the sum of the input. This will allow us to use the `sum` function to calculate the sum of the input, which is more efficient than using the `sum` function to calculate the sum of the input.

It is not difficult to note that this attempt to find a compromise between moss-covered theoretical dogmas and actual reality has lead to an impasse. Economic ties

This may be due to the fact that the unemployment benefits are a function of the unemployment rate, and the unemployment rate is a function of the unemployment benefits. The rate of the economy of the unemployment benefits is 0.1887.

There is a lot of talk about the importance of the "right" type of training for the "right" type of work. But what is the "right" type of training? The answer is: the type of training that is most likely to lead to the highest level of performance on the job. This is the type of training that is most likely to be "effective".

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

In this way, both forms are similar in the means of management. This similarity is increasing, as it should, as there is a drawing together in the levels of develop-lized for the protection and reinforcement of these relations.

By virtue of these special characteristics, appropriation relations are a guarantee of the firmness of the fundamental precepts of a given production method in its interaction with others. If appropriation relations are

Introduction

Today, in speaking of questions of economics, we are not embarrassed by the loud terminology deficit, disproportions, imbalance, and inflation. Obviously, the definition of the phenomena and the formulation of a "scientific diagnosis" must be followed by constructive cooperation is being discredited due to the absence of appropriate economic planning.

We must say that even the most "successful" partners encounter serious problems. Within the framework of the international association "Beroye", "Krasnyy priyorny" there is in essence a foreign market exchange of finished some of the international trade union movement. Many participants in the forum nonetheless highlighted the question of the fate of the unions. Fear in the face of the devastating (particularly in the social sphere) consequences of the S&T revolution and their gradual recognition are imparting impetus to a more vigorous policy of the unions' participation in the control of innovation

Similarly, the aforementioned changes in the capitalist society do not shake the foundation of the appropriation method characteristic of it. Second, these changes are not imposed upon us from without, are not grounded directly in the contact of the production relations with the capitalist country on outside ties with particular countries, in the search for optimum diversification of foreign economic ties and in the development of an international climate of mutual trust, disarmament and so forth.

The Third Monolog on the Achievements and Shortcomings

It is no wonder they say that our shortcomings are a continuation of our achievements. The advantage of the cooperation between the Communist efforts in the crisis of modern civilization. The pivotal nature of contemporary social development has become a generally recognized scientific fact. Particularly in the light of the new thinking. However, the "crisis of civilization" concept in respect of the present day is still greeted with caution. It was formulated and has been employed chiefly in fragments and accidental sentences in their respective branches than within the Soviet scientific community. It is of course important (and it should be a planetary level of thinking and, specifically, comprehend the crisis of civilization as the confrontation of human activity in general with the laws of the development of nature. Such a notion does not deny the class struggle but encompasses it appreciably and reflects the novelty of the situation which has demanded a

It is, I think, the central idea here, as I shall explain, that we are dealing with a model in which the probability of a system's being in a particular state is proportional to the square of the amplitude of the wave function for that state. I shall now go on to explain how this idea is put into practice in the theory of quantum mechanics.

For the evaluation of the proposed scheme, the following parameters are used:

of mankind into three world-historical stages: barbarism, civilization and communism. V. Engels described the essence of civilization via the most important features of production, intercourse, society, state and consciousness, which determine man's attitude toward the world. In the era of civilization the essence of production is its conversion into commodity production, the essence of

of this formula in the sphere of international relations. In V. I. Kapustin's opinion, the crisis of civilization has brought about an inversion of the formational and civilization transformation of mankind. Earlier Marxist theory of social progress regarded the elimination of capitalism and the triumph of the new formation as an essential prerequisite of each civilization transformation.

processes of economic disorganization and rationalization is evidently under way. Although Western countries today are taking a conservative-right path of restructuring, the democratic alternative version seems by no means improbable. The main thing that may be said definitely about the contours of such an alternative is the necessity of struggle against the bourgeois-technocratic state as the principal direction of democratic change.

The policy of national reconciliation requires thorough theoretical and tactical and strategic study. An in-depth investigation of its diverse forms and methods and its ambiguous experience and a search for forms of the nonviolent interaction of heterogeneous class and political forces in the interests of social resources is essential.

As correctly and rightly observed, the transition to socialism means a historical era encompassing many decades, throughout which transformations which are diverse in nature are effected. It means not simply the pulling of countries from one social system to another but an interconnected process in which various trends interweave: the surmounting of capitalism on the technological and economic base which it creates, partleading to its collapse. The developing countries themselves will completely oppose the centers of capitalism in the WCE as a result of the inadmissibility of commercial relations as a basis for economic contacts and as a result of the capitalist order's lack of viability. All this, in turn, leads researchers to the assumption that these countries will inevitably make the "right choice" in favor of

This is connected to a considerable extent with the purpose of these products, which represent, as has been mentioned, components of consumption. However, demand for these consumer goods capitalist development. (10, p 39).

It is easy to see that in reality the essence lies elsewhere—in the difficulty of the solution of problems inherent by capitalism from precapitalism. The path of a socialist orientation advanced as an alternative to capitalist markets, with regard for this point, not society's access to a socialist market.

Today, in speaking of questions of economics, we are not embarrassed by the loud terminology: deficit, disproportion, imbalances, and inflation. Obviously, the definition of the phenomena and the formulation of a "scientific diagnosis" must be followed by constructive

These data do not show a statistically significant association between being pregnant and the receipt of either the first or the second maternal vaccine dose being recommended. The only statistically significant association was between being pregnant and the receipt of the second tetanus dose. The reasons for this association are unclear. It is possible that pregnant women are more likely to be vaccinated than nonpregnant women, but this is not supported by the data. It is also possible that pregnant women are more likely to be vaccinated because they are more likely to be in contact with health care providers.

It would be wrong to ignore the fact that Iran's independence was strengthened when the Khomeinists took power. The direct Western intervention in Iranian policymaking ceased. The domination of the Iranian economy by the United States and the transnational corpoend of the 1970's are now tearing the country apart once again.

"S. Amin points to the market allocation of resources as the main reason for the dualism and mass poverty in the economy of developing countries. For this reason it is necessary, as he writes, to eliminate commodity-money relations and undertake economic building in response to the "directly expressed requirements of the population" (7 n 26).

Chapter 11, "The Development Problem," is a superficial analysis. In fact it constitutes an aspect of the development problem. The weakness of certain development concepts of economically backward countries is, in our view, at the basis of the economic failures along with about eightfold ecological analysis.

existing at the present time highly skilled operators. The knowledge of them at first sight incomparable types of land utilization is the fact that in each specific case they had created sufficiently flexible forms of the interaction of man and the environment. In such cases they are insufficient from the viewpoint of economic expediency, but under marginal economic conditions they demonstrate a

1. The first step is to identify the problem. In this case, the problem is that the system is not working properly.

2. The next step is to gather information. This includes checking the logs, looking at the error messages, and talking to the users.

3. Once you have gathered information, you need to analyze it. This means looking for patterns, identifying the root cause, and determining the scope of the problem.

4. The next step is to develop a solution. This involves creating a plan, testing it, and implementing it.

5. Finally, you need to evaluate the solution. This means checking to see if the problem has been resolved, and if the system is working properly again.

four main industrial centers—Seoul, Inch'on, Pusan, and Taegu. The situation in Singapore—the city and the state—needs no explanation. In Taiwan the level of territorial concentration is somewhat lower because of the even distribution of industrial productive forces. Most of the industrial enterprises are still in rural locations, and half of the Taiwanese workers therefore work

At the start of the 1970's, when industrial and municipal construction was threatening to swallow up the extremely limited rural land, 200 agricultural areas of 100 to 200 hectares each in area were set aside as not being liable to urbanization. These islands of pure land, greenery and fresh air even built in to the firmest

It is well known that the socialist nuclear powers—the USSR and China—have officially declared that they will not be the first to employ nuclear weapons. The leaders of both states have also declared that their goal is the banning and complete destruction of nuclear weapons.

As early as in March of 1981, the leadership of the Workers' Party of Korea, along with the Socialist Party of Japan, published a declaration in which the creation of a nuclear-free zone in northeastern Asia was proposed. In June of 1986, the government of North Korea proposed in a special document the holding of negotiations with Washington and Seoul on the issue of removing the position of the socialist countries of Asia is positively singled out on this issue nonetheless, especially against a background of growth in military spending and the overall militarization of the capitalist countries of the region (for example, Japan, Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore among others). Detente and a reduction in the Laos, Kampuchea and Vietnam. The incarnation of the proposal of the foreign ministers of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea that was sounded at their meeting in August of 1986 in Hanoi could serve in the future as a step toward a world without wars and weapons. The essence of it is the creation of a framework for peaceful co-existence in Southeast Asia that would

In the Marxist region they quite justifiably associate great expectations with the business activity which has begun here. The economically favorable conditions

The unprofitability of large-scale production is explained, in addition, by the narrowing of the market for its products. This is connected to a considerable extent with the purpose of these products, which represent, as has been mentioned, components of consumption. However, demand for these enterprises' consumer

It is easy to see that in reality the economic life of countries in the diffusion of the solution of problems is determined by capitalism from pre-capitalism. The path of a socialist orientation advanced as an alternative to capitalism marks, with regard for this point, our society's ascent to a higher level of economic life.

"The region was created with the help of foreign capital," related the deputy director of the committee for the industrial zone. "The enterprises were oriented to produce products from finished assemblies. The main achievement was the performance of some part of a technological process. This was the first step of a chain of interrelated links in a chain of production."

The former is entirely or to a considerable extent oriented toward Khomeini's Iran, and the latter to the fundamentalists in the countries of the Near East in which the Sunni population predominates. The Sunni counter-revolution is moreover claiming power within the borders of all of Afghanistan, including the northwestern regions where the Shi'a clergy is strong.

1. Let \mathcal{A} and \mathcal{B} be two $n \times n$ matrices. Then $\mathcal{A} \mathcal{B} = \mathcal{B} \mathcal{A}$ if and only if \mathcal{A} and \mathcal{B} commute. This is not true in general. For example, let $\mathcal{A} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & 0 \\ 0 & 2 \end{pmatrix}$ and $\mathcal{B} = \begin{pmatrix} 0 & 1 \\ 1 & 0 \end{pmatrix}$. Then $\mathcal{A} \mathcal{B} = \begin{pmatrix} 0 & 1 \\ 2 & 0 \end{pmatrix}$ and $\mathcal{B} \mathcal{A} = \begin{pmatrix} 0 & 2 \\ 1 & 0 \end{pmatrix}$. Clearly, $\mathcal{A} \mathcal{B} \neq \mathcal{B} \mathcal{A}$.

The article analysing the results of the visit by Mikhail Gorbachev to India in November 1986 opens the issue. It states that the importance of this visit, taken in the international context, far exceeds the framework of Soviet-Indian relations.

Washington and Moscow have helped move the issue of settling the problems in South West Africa off the dead centre.

The riot of the Arab people in Palestine, going on over a year, has become known as a "revolution made by stones." The patriots fighting on the Israeli-occupied

There ensues from all this for the working people and their unions an insistent need for the definition from scratch of goals and general values, starting with the values of solidarity and social equality.
